The Trial of Winnemore.

The trial of George W. Winnemore for the murder of Mrs. Magilton, was concluded yesterday by the jury's bringing in a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree. We have no comments to make on this verdict, but in the interests of justice we feel that some comments ought to be made upon the manner in which this trial has been conducted. We think that no unprejudiced observer who has carefully watched the proceedings in this case, has failed to be impressed with the conviction that Winnemore has not had such a trial as every person charged with a great crime, and whose life is in jeopardy, ought to have.

In the first place, there has been an undue and almost unprecedented haste in the trial of this man. Mrs. Magilton was murdered on the 25th of April, and on the same day Winnemore was arrested as the perpetrator. The next day he was held for trial. Two days afterwards, on the 29th, the matter went before the Grand Jury. On the 3d of May the prisoner was brought into Court, and as he had no counsel the Court assigned two gentlemen to conduct the defense. In despite of the repeated protestations of the counsel of the prisoner, he was hurried to trial. Sufficient time was not allowed to the prisoner to prepare a defense, if he had any. His counsel were evidently embarrassed and crippled by want of time, and the defense was only such as could be made upon the spur of the moment.

Now, the question arises, why all this haste? Why could not a reasonable time have been given this man and his counsel to prepare his case? Even if guilty, he was safely confined in prison, where he could do no harm. Suppose his case had gone over to the next term of Court, would there have been the harm? Some months ago a man was shot dead in open Court in this city, in the presence of the Court and of hundreds of witnesses. The man who did that deed has not yet been tried. Yet his guilt was open, and beyond all question.

Here is a man rushed to trial, and convicted on circumstantial evidence alone, within two weeks after the alleged commission of the offense for which he was tried. If justice did not demand the immediate trial of Leis, who murdered a man in open Court, how did it of Winnemore, who was only suspected of murder? Perhaps a new leaf is to be turned over in our criminal jurisprudence; but if so, we would suggest that the docket be first cleared of some of its old cases. Did the District Attorney intend to make Winnemore a sacrifice to popular impatience with delays in the past? Perhaps the cue to his course in this case may be found in his remark "that if Gottlieb Williams had been hung at once this murder would not have been committed, and that the surest way of preventing future crimes was the speedy execution of the guilty." But the interests of justice will never be promoted by trials which do not command the confidence of the community. The speedy conviction and punishment of criminals is doubtless desirable, but the enjoyment by the accused of all necessary facilities for a fair trial is of infinitely greater importance. We most sincerely regret that in this case the conviction does not carry with it that moral weight in the community which is so desirable and so essential to any healthy public influence. Winnemore may be guilty—we do not express any opinion on that point—but the feeling of a large portion of the community is that he did not have a fair chance to make his defense.

It seemed to be assumed from the start that he was to be held guilty until he proved himself innocent, instead of the good old rule that he was to be deemed innocent until proved to be guilty.

The Luxembourg Question and the Peace of Europe.

Despite the warlike despatches we have been receiving for some days past in regard to the Luxembourg affair, we have definite news to-day that the London Peace Conference has agreed to these bases of deliberation:—"First, The territory of Luxembourg to remain in possession of the King of Holland as Grand Duke. "Second, The neutralization of the Grand Duchy is to be guaranteed by all the European powers participating in the Conference. "Third, The fortress of Luxembourg is to be razed. If all parties are agreed to this, it is difficult to see how any further misunderstanding can grow out of the Luxembourg question. We may therefore hope that the peace of Europe will not be immediately disturbed. The attitude of France and Prussia towards each other is such, however, as to leave but little doubt that a war between the two countries is not far distant. Each is straining every nerve to procure the most complete and effective arming of its people; each is maintaining vast armies ready to spring to the contest at a moment's notice; and, what is more strange and ominous than all else, the people of each country are apparently mad with a desire to imbue their hands in each others' blood. It is only the prudence and reserve of the rulers that now keep the peace. The French feel humiliated and exasperated by the powerful and commanding position which Prussia has attained among the nations of Europe. On the other hand, the Prussians are elated and intoxicated with their great success in the Austrian war, and their subsequent consolidation of the powers of Northern Germany into one great kingdom, and are disposed to resist any outside interference or questioning of their present status, or of their future development. Moreover, they have an ancient hostility to France, coming down from the days of the great Napoleon, which only needs a fitting occasion to break out in acts of war. With such a state of feeling prevailing between the people of the two countries, a great war would only seem to be a question of time. Yet all Europe is in such a condition, that a war between Prussia and France would more or less involve the other powers. We do not wonder, therefore, that the rulers hesitate to light that fearful flame which, once kindled, may burn so fiercely and disastrously, and may be so difficult to extinguish. War is every day becoming more and more expensive. Most of the European nations are already struggling under loads of debt too heavy to be carried. A general war of any great duration would precipitate several of the great powers into irretrievable bankruptcy. There are, therefore, strong influences tending to the preservation of peace. Let us hope that they may, after all, prove to be the more powerful.

PIRCE REDETTIVES.—General Franklin Pierce has left his home in the distant East, and has arrived at Baltimore, on his way to visit Jefferson Davis. With one exception, this is the only time we have heard of his redoubtable Excellency since the nation was left distracted by his retirement from the Presidential chair. The career of the great Peirce is one which illustrates that we are indeed creatures of accident. Nobody dreamed of Pierce for President until he was nominated, and then, after a temporary rise above his level, he was once more sent into his native obscurity. The silence of his life was broken by the writing of a letter in 1861, which richly merited hanging for its author. And now, once more, like a comet, he appears after a periodical absence of five years, and goes to visit Jefferson Davis, after which he will once more vanish for five years more.

DULNESS PREVALENT IN THE WEST.—Reports that come to us from the Western country indicate a condition in the business world most threatening. There exists a universal distress in all the branches of trade. The heavy overflow of the Mississippi has caused the destruction of millions upon millions of property, and has interfered with the river trade, thus cutting the artery which supplies the business life-blood to the West. Prices are high, confidence does not exist, and unless something occurs to give life to trade, the papers of the West say they dare not speculate on what will be the consequences. Compared with theirs our condition is healthy, and while we repine at our own lot, we ought not to despair, for by comparison trade is lively in our city.

THE FIRST CHURCH OF THE SEMINOLES.—The Presbyterian mission among the Creeks and Seminoles in the Indian Territory was broken up when Albert Pike misled those poor people into rebellion. Since those who are left have returned to their homes, the missionaries have resumed their work. It has been deemed advisable now to organize the Christian Seminoles into a separate Church. Mr. Ramsey, the missionary, reports sixty-six members already gathered in, with nearly as many more who were prevented by distance and severe weather from attending his meeting. Describing the transition, he says:—"It was to our mind a strong evidence of the reality and power of our blessed religion, to see men who were once fierce savages, whom the strong arm of Government could not drive from their favorite haunts in the swamps of Florida, now subdued by the victorious Cross, sitting weeping at the feet of the Prince of Peace. The greater part of the noted Billy Bowlegs' band are now members of our church. Sermon being over, we proceeded to baptize the candidates for church membership, twenty-four in number, and five infants. It was an interesting sight, which will not soon be forgotten at the Seminoles Agency. We then proceeded to administer the Lord's Supper, of which nearly one hundred persons partook, as many Methodists and some Baptist brethren sat down with us."

RECOGNITION LONG DELAYED.—Just fifty years ago William Humphrey, a "seven years' service man," left the British army, and at seventy-eight years of age he has just received a reward from his grateful country. The old man went through the Peninsula war, doing his subordinate duties in a creditable way, and within the last month he has received his pension of ninepence daily.
